Just Transition

The question of how socio-economic and ecological concerns can be reconciled is increasingly being discussed under the concept of just transition, particularly in relation to the transition to renewables and the decarbonisation of industries (automotive, energy industry, etc.). The question of what is just is as controversial as the shape and scope of the transition. In this module, participants gain insight into research debates around just transition and will engage with policies around just transition in regions and countries of their choice. The aim of the exercise is to analyse the complexity of the topic and attempt to formulate and critically reflect on recommendations for action.
